Master of Arts (MA) in the study of religions multidisciplinary approaches to religions

GENERAL OUTLINE

Teaching for the Master of Arts in the Study of Religions is provided by the various institutes of three different Faculties of the University of Lausanne (Theology and Sciences of Religions, Arts, Social and Political Sciences). Thanks to this platform UNIL is one of the most important centres of excellence in Europe for the study of religion.

The study curriculum combines interdisciplinary training with a comparative perspective and specialisation in the following areas: Social Sciences of Contemporary Religions (migrations, sociology, psychology), Ancient and Modern Christianity, Ancient and Modern Judaism, Religious Plurality, South Asian Religions, Polytheistic Religions of the Ancient Worlds, Socio-Anthropology and History of Islam, Transversal and Marginalised Traditions, Anthropology of Religion, Comparative Sciences of Religions, etc.

You may opt for either a general course or specialisation in a more focused area of study (religious traditions, historical periods, methodological approach, geographical area, etc.).

Objectives

The Master of Arts in the Study of Religions is designed as a strongly interdisciplinary cycle of training and specialisation. It provides you with in-depth theoretical and methodological skills in the study of religions and an opportunity to deepen your own reflective analysis of this discipline. It thus leads you to build your own informed and critical outlook on religious cultures in history as well as in the contemporary world. The study curriculum also provides you with the tools you need to analyse and address issues relating to the plurality of religious fields and interculturality. You are encouraged to construct your own study curriculum by combining the tools of social science of religions and the anthropological-historical approach. You may also opt to specialise in one of these two approaches rather than both.

EDUCATIONAL CONTENT

The programme consists of five modules and may be completed by an optional sixth module.

Mobility

You have the opportunity to study for one semester in a partner institution, or to carry out field work abroad.

Career prospects

More broadly, the programme also provides cross-disciplinary skills: oral and written communication, analytical and summarising skills, research experience, acquisition and transmission of knowledge, autonomy of judgment, critical thinking and a reflective approach. This range of skills, combined with specialist knowledge gained during the course, prepares you for a very varied range of careers and sectors, such as:

- National and international public administrations
- Non-governmental organisations, particularly inter-cultural and development-related
- Teaching
- National and international associative networks
- Polling and market surveys
- Journalism, media, public relations, communication, advertising
- Research and teaching (universities, universities of applied sciences)
- Other: public and private enterprises, SMEs, etc.

Alumni move into a wide variety of roles, for example as a consultant, military liaison officer, or staff member of a non-governmental organisation.
